How do I access these journals from home?
Visit our remote access instructions for procedures and requirements. Most of these titles are only available to VCU students, faculty, and staff.
What is an online journal?
Online serials may be defined very broadly as any journal, magazine, e'zine, webzine, ejournal, newsletter which is available over the Internet. The VCU Libraries online journal site strives to provide access to as many scholarly full-text online journals as possible.
How do I find specific journals or journal articles in
Dow Jones Publications Library
Ethnic Newswatch
International Index to Black Periodicals
InfoTrac OneFile
Lexis Nexis Academic Universe
MD Consult
Extra Software
Some online journals may only be available in PDF format, a file type which requires Adobe Acrobat Reader software in order to be viewed or printed. If you do not already have this software loaded on your computer, additional information, including downloading and installation help, is available.
How to use these pages
This site is not meant to take the place of searchable online periodical databases. When performing research you may be best served by searching first in one of our databases, then searching or browsing this site to see whether we provide online access to the full-text of a particular title. Also remember that the library provides access to many other magazine and journals in our print collection. In order to search for those titles go to our library catalog.
Please note: It is possible that journal titles and/or dates of inclusion listed are inaccurate. Although we make every effort to maintain the accuracy of our holdings, information accessed through the WWW can change without notice.

The World Health Organisation defines palliative care as "the active total care of patients whose disease is not responsive to curative treatment. Control of pain, of other symptoms, and of psychological, social and spiritual problems, is paramount. The goal of palliative care is achievement of the best quality of life for patients and their families."

Palliative care is necessarily multidisciplinary. It is unrealistic to expect one profession or individual to have the skills to make the necessary assessment, institute the necessary interventions, and provide ongoing monitoring.

CLINICIAN'S CORNER
Palliative Care in the Final Days of Life
"They Were Expecting It at Any Time"
James Hallenbeck, MD
JAMA. 2005;293:2265-2271.
ABSTRACT
Providing care to actively dying patients presents unique challenges for the clinician. Patients in their final days require careful symptom management. Families need support and coaching as death approaches. Care does not end with the death of the patient but continues through death pronouncement, family notification of the death, discussion of autopsy, and immediate bereavement support. Skills in these and related areas are discussed in the context of one man's death, as illuminated by comments made after death by his daughter and his physician. This case also highlights the often differing perspectives of families and clinicians as they work to deal with a patient's death. A goal of mastering the palliative skills necessary to competently care for an actively dying patient is to enable a patient to die peacefully and relatively free of discomfort. Achieving such competency should also help to relieve clinician stress attendant to caring for dying patients.
The Patient's Story
Mr R was a 74-year-old widower diagnosed with cholangiocarcinoma. Three months later, a stent was placed to prevent biliary obstruction. He was reportedly in good health for 6 months, but thereafter, Mr R became progressively jaundiced and weaker. Within 9 months of his diagnosis, he was using a wheelchair. In clinic, his oncologist referred him to home hospice. Two days after hospice admission, Mr R became acutely ill with a fever (temperature to 39°C) and gasping respirations. His family brought him to the hospital. He was intubated, admitted to the intensive care unit (ICU), and given antibiotics and vigorous hydration. Blood cultures grew Escherichia coli. A palliative care consultation was obtained. A family conference was held, and the team recommended a transition to comfort care. The family agreed. Mr R was transferred to a palliative care unit bed. Although the family thought that Mr R's death was imminent, he lived for a week. He initially rallied and was able to recognize and greet visitors. Over the next days, he became less alert and eventually was unresponsive. By day 7 of his hospitalization, he was receiving 2 mg of morphine every 4 hours intravenously for possible pain and dyspnea and lorazepam for agitation. Atropine eye drops were administered sublingually for retained respiratory secretions. His family remained at his bedside during his final days. On the day of his death, his morphine dose was doubled because of an increased respiratory rate, suggestive of possible underlying pain or dyspnea. At 10 PM, he was given a continuous morphine infusion and his family went home. He died at 11:47 PM. His family was called and returned to the hospital. They stayed with Mr R until 6:30 AM. A week later, the palliative care consulting attending physician made a follow-up telephone call to the patient's daughter to offer condolences.

Dexmedetomidine Facilitates the Withdrawal of Ventilatory Support in Palliative Care

[Case Report]

WITHDRAWAL of ventilatory support in the setting of a terminal illness presents the challenge to the physician of maintaining the comfort of the patient and optimizing sedation and analgesia for the time that the patient has remaining to be with his or her family and friends. Opiates and benzodiazepines are most commonly used for terminal palliation, but this combination of medications has the disadvantage of depressing ventilatory drive and airway reflexes to the degree that it may hasten the patient's death. This problem has been discussed in medical and legal literature invoking the medieval theological concept of the "rule of double effect" to assist physicians who are faced with the need to make the distinction between euthanasia and appropriate symptom relief in the terminally ill.[1,2] Dexmedetomidine (Abbott Laboratories, Abbott Park, IL), with its highly selective [alpha]$_2$ agonism, provides physicians with another pharmacologic treatment option that addresses many of the possible sources of end-of life distress,[3] with less of a problem with the double effect. We report on the care of a patient where provision of palliative care and withdrawal of ventilatory support was optimized by the use of a dexmedetomidine infusion.

Case Report

A 97-yr-old woman presented to the emergency department with an acute abdomen and peritoneal free air. Before her illness and admission, she was alert and oriented but was dependent on her daughters, with whom she lived, for assistance with all activities of daily living. She had a preoperative history of severe aortic stenosis, a remote myocardial infarction, hypertension, and glaucoma.

The patient underwent an emergency laparotomy for an anterior wall gastric ulcer that was repaired by omental patch. She remained intubated, ventilated, and sedated postoperatively because of hemodynamic instability and oliguria. Her postoperative electrocardiogram and troponin indicated a new lateral wall non-ST elevation myocardial infarction. She was evaluated by a cardiologist and was not a candidate for a revascularization procedure. Postoperative analgesia was provided with a fentanyl infusion ranging from 50 to 150 μg/h. The patient did not follow any commands and, at the lower range of the fentanyl infusion, resisted nursing care with surprising strength.

During the next 72 h, the patient manifested cardiogenic and septic shock, a new onset of atrial fibrillation, acute renal failure, and thrombocytopenia. She failed to wean from ventilatory support because of hypercarbic respiratory failure.

The Care of Patients with Dementia: A Modern Jewish Ethical Perspective
Alan B. Jotkowitz, MD*, A. Mark Clarfield, MD*† and Shimon Glick, MD*
Patients with dementia and their families can face many difficult and agonizing ethical dilemmas over the course of the illness. An awareness of the Jewish ethical response to some of these issues can help clinicians in treating patients of the Jewish faith and also serve as an example of how one ethical system addresses these questions. The Jewish response is grounded in a profound respect and value for human life in all its forms and man's responsibility to preserve it, but Judaism rejects unproven therapies and recognizes the limitations of modern medicine. Jewish law also codifies normative obligations that children have toward their elderly parents. With these principles in the forefront, this article analyzes a Jewish ethical response to various problems in the care of the demented patient such as truth telling, transfer to a nursing home, artificial nutrition, and end-of-life care, taking into account modern concepts of the doctor-patient relationship and ancient Jewish tradition.

Socialization to Dying: Social Determinants of Death Acknowledgment and Treatment Among Terminally Ill Geriatric Patients*

HOLLY GWEN PRIGERSON
Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, University of Pittsburgh

Journal of Health and Social Behavior 1992, Vol. 33 (December):378–395

Although the vast majority of deaths occur among terminally ill geriatric patients, little is known about the etiology of these patients' death acknowledgment and ultimate type of treatment. Based on interviews with 76 triads composed of physicians, terminally ill patients, and primary caregivers, this study uses the socialization perspective to identify the actors and actions that most strongly affect the patient's death acknowledgment and receipt of exclusively palliative care (i.e., socialization to the dying role). Whereas patient preferences and sociodemographic characteristics do not influence significantly the patient's odds of death acknowledgment, these odds are increased if their primary caregivers accept death, their physicians are not affiliated with a teaching hospital, and the terminal

Saudi King Fahd Buried in Unmarked Grave (AP) AP - Muslim leaders and Saudi princes bade farewell to King Fahd on Tuesday, saying prayers in a jammed mosque and then burying him in an unmarked desert grave in keeping with the kingdom's austere version of Islam.
Unprecedented Repair Awaits Astronauts (AP) AP - Discovery's astronauts took a call from President Bush on Tuesday as they prepared for a task that's never before been attempted: sending a spacewalker beneath the shuttle to repair filler sticking out between the tiles on the ship's belly.
Seven Marines Killed in Western Iraq (AP) AP - The U.S. military said Tuesday that six Marines were killed in action in western Iraq, pushing the death toll for Americans since the start of the war past 1,800.
Bolton Presents Credentials at U.N. (AP) AP - John Bolton presented his credentials Tuesday as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, a job which will challenge him to work with diplomats from 190 nations in a place he has called irrelevant.
Drug Rules Catch Baseball Star (Los Angeles Times) Los Angeles Times - Rafael Palmeiro, the Baltimore Oriole slugger who denied taking steroids before a congressional committee in March and then took part in a program designed to educate youngsters on the dangers of the drug, on Monday was suspended for 10 days for violating baseball's steroids policy.
Weather Service Boosts Hurricane Forecast (AP) AP - The government on Tuesday sharply boosted its forecast for hurricanes this season, predicting 18 to 21 tropical storms by the end of November.
Violent Mobs Surge Through Sudan Capital (AP) AP - Violent mobs surged again into the streets of Sudan's capital Tuesday, a day after 36 people died in riots sparked by the death of Sudanese vice president and former southern rebel leader John Garang.
CNOOC Withdraws $18.5B Bid for Unocal (AP) AP - China's government-controlled CNOOC Ltd. withdrew its $18.4 billion bid for Unocal Corp. on Tuesday, ending a politically charged takeover battle that highlighted the United States' growing apprehension about the economic rise of the world's largest country.
Aniston Was 'Shocked' by Pitt-Jolie Pics (AP) AP - In her first interview since splitting with Brad Pitt, Jennifer Aniston says she was "shocked" by the breakup and is trying to "pick up the pieces in the midst of this media circus."
Palmeiro's Credibility Now in Question (AP) AP - When Rafael Palmeiro became the fourth player in major league history to collect 3,000 hits and 500 home runs, his status as a future member of the Hall of Fame seemed somewhat secure. That topic is again open for discussion, along with a new one: Palmeiro's credibility.
NASA astronauts say shuttle fix risky, but simple (Reuters) Reuters - Discovery's astronauts had misgivings about the risky spacewalk mission to the shuttle's fragile belly but agreed to try the repair because it seemed relatively easy to do, crewmembers said on Tuesday.
Saudi King Fahd buried in simple Riyadh grave (Reuters) Reuters - Saudi Arabia's King Fahd was buried in a simple unmarked grave on Tuesday after a brief funeral to mourn the monarch who ruled the oil superpower for more than two turbulent decades.
Iran to restart nuclear work, crisis looms (Reuters) Reuters - Iran said on Tuesday there was no going back on its decision to restart nuclear fuel work, a move EU leaders said would torpedo negotiations on Iran's atomic ambitions and spark an international crisis.
Seven US Marines killed in Iraq, toll passes 1,800 (Reuters) Reuters - Seven U.S. Marines have been killed in fighting in Iraq's western Anbar province, a guerrilla heartland that keeps challenging U.S. and Iraqi troops despite repeated security crackdowns.
Bush signs Central American trade pact (Reuters) Reuters - President Bush on Tuesday signed a free-trade agreement
